Murray, 9 Others Due Awards for Public Service

Washington Police Chief Robert V. Murray and nine other career civil servants will be given "career service awards" by the National Civil Service League at an April 14 dinner at the Sheraton-Park Hotel.

The awards, now in their 10th year, are given to "encourage and recognize competence in the public service."

Other recipients are John O. Crow, deputy commissioner of the Interior Department's Bureau of Indian Affairs; Smith J. DeFrance, director of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Ames Research Center in California; William J. Driver, deputy administrator of the Veterans Administration; U. Alexis Johnson, Deputy Undersecretary of State for political affairs.

Also, James S. Lay, jr., executive secretary of the Central Intelligence Agency's United States Intelligence Board; Philip A. Loomis, general counsel for the Securities and Exchange Commission; G. Lewis Schmidt, assistant director of the United States Information Agency; F. Joachim Weyl, deputy chief and chief scientist for the Navy Department's Office of Naval Research, and B. Frank White, Dallas regional commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service.
